“This year's theme – ‘Process of Design’ – celebrates the process that every designer takes in conceptualizing and realizing every design project,” said Sue Vessella, M.F.A., Chair of the Graphic Design Department and Associate Dean of the School of Media, Culture & Design at Woodbury. “The process often is more important than the final result. So, in some cases, we will show rough thumbnail drawings, color and typography studies and the path students took in arriving at their final designs.”

In recent years, Woodbury’s Graphic Design program has gained a reputation for producing graphic design graduates capable of winning both national and international competitions and, most important, getting jobs once they graduate. Since 2009, student work has won more than 60 regional, national and international design awards. Recently, senior students had the opportunity to meet with a dozen local employers at an event that was the equivalent of “speed dating.” Participating employers included: SKA Design, Art Machine, Mattel, Seismic Production, JMCOY Design, Princess Cruises and Midnight Oil.

Woodbury’s Graphic Design program grants a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree, which is included in the university’s accreditation by the National Association of Schools of Art and Design.
